Roxbury, Oct. 16, 1870.

My Dear Friend:

Let me thank you for the two notes received from you since you left us.

In accordance with your suggestion, I called at the residence of Dr. White yesterday, in order to state my case to him, but he was not at home, and would not be until evening. I shall endeavor to see him to-morrow forenoon. I am eager to obtain the least alleviation for my bodily torments, which remain about the same as when you were here; in addition to which, I have a severe attack of influenza, increasing my head troubles.

I am glad you have received a letter from our thoroughly Irish friend R. D. Webb, and sent a reply to it, which he will greatly prize, as he does all the epistolary favors of his specially cherished friends. Frank or I will duly apprise him of any change in my condition for the better.

Fanny desires me to enclose for you a photograph of herself and Helen, with her loving regards, to which my dear wife adds her own.

I felt very grateful to you for your visit, and equally regretful that you found me in such a miserable plight that I could do nothing for your comfort or entertainment. But you need no assurances from me how much I love and admire you. It will not be in the power of death to separate us a hair's breadth.

With sympathetic and affectionate regards to John Edward and his wife, I remain,

Yours, "world without end,"

Rev. S. J. May. Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
